Construction of the Great Northern Railway (India) The Construction of the Great Northern Railway (India) was the start of the Indian branch of the Great Northern Railway. History Background The Bengal Nagpur Railway had been created in 1891, with a long line from Nagpur in Maharashtra to Asansol in Bengal. The line ran through the Nagpur Railway's Zone of the Zonal Railway. The route was built under the supervision of Isambard Kingdom

Brunel, the engineer for the Great Western Railway. The Bengal Nagpur Railway Company was incorporated on 1 July 1891 with a capital of £11,655,020. It was one of the largest companies in India. The promoters of the company included a group of Anglo-Indian businessmen led by William Hunter Russell, who formed a syndicate to take over shares in the new company. The promoters started a new subsidiary line, the Nagpur Railway, which connected Nagpur with the Great Indian Peninsula Railway line in the Nagpur area. A small terminal station, Nagpur Junction, was opened in July 1891. In the next three years, the first section from Nagpur to Poona, a distance of 85 km, was completed. Beginnings In the same year, the Nagpur Railway Company received a Royal Charter as the Great Northern Railway. The charter was granted by Queen Victoria on 4 February 1892. The Great Northern Railway (UK) was now able to operate its line in India. The total cost of the Nagpur-Poona line was £846,800. The line was opened for traffic on 1 October 1892. It was the first mainline railway in India, and was operated by the Great Northern Railway. The Great Indian Peninsula Railway (GIPR) ran 82157476af
